To Demos and Feds, in Maryland and Virginia, who retain my Books.

"The wicked borrower forgets to return."

MANY hundred volumes on law, divinity, history ancient and modern, travels, the English poets and prose writers, lords and commons debates, the classics, Greek, Latin and French, on natural and moral philosophy, in fine, belles lettres complete, have been borrowed and taken out of my father's extensive library in Annapolis. It is now upwards of four years since my father's death, and I have not been able to collect one fiftieth part of his books, therefore, have adopted this mode to inform the unlawful holders of them, that I have the sole property in them. My father's name is written in most of the books—"Daniel Dulany of the middle Temple." Those who mean to return the books will please to write to me. Direct to Benjamin Dulany, Shuter's Hill, Fairfax, Virginia, that I may send for them.

N. B. One Book in particular I value very high. Coke on Littleton, with sergeant Fitzpatrick's notes, invaluable to a law student. May 9. 2

Thirty Dollars Reward.

RAN AWAY from the subscriber, living near Piscataway in Prince George's county in the state of Maryland, on 9th April 1803, a Negro Man named MYAL. He went to spend his holiday's with his wife, who is a slave to Mr. Addington Skinner near Nottingham, and resided there until Wednesday morning, and then was seen with some of Mr. Notley Maddox's people on their way to the City of Washington. He is about five feet eight or ten inches high, rather mulatto cast, but dark, and a little round shouldered, and has lost one of his lower foreteeth, on the left side of his forehead he had scar near the edge of his hair. As he had a variety of clothing, it is uncertain what he took with him. Whoever takes up the said run away and brings him home shall receive the above reward, and reasonable expences paid, and if secured, so that I get him again.

N. B. I forewarn all persons from harbouring or entertaining said fellow, at their peril, and particularly all masters of vessels from taking him away.

INTERESTING DEBATE.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Friday, March 11.

The order of the day was moved for going into a committee to conſider further of the ſupply to be granted to his majeſty.

The houſe accordingly reſolved itſelf into committee, and Mr. Serjeant moved that ten thouſand ſeamen be added to the number now exiſting.

After the queſtion was put from the chair.

Mr. Francis roſe to offer a few obſervations on the motion, and it is with regret we mention that the commencement of his ſpeech was delivered in a tone of voice too low to be diſtinctly heard in the gallery. The vote which the committee were now called upon to acceed to was one which involved conſiderations of the moſt important nature, and before any member could, conſiſtently with his duty, agree to it, ſome general explanation was due on the part of his majeſty's miniſters. It was of importance to the committee to have ſome information communicated reſpecting the ſituation in which the country was placed, the reaſons which rendered ſo extraordinary preparations neceſſary, the character of thoſe with whom the application of thoſe preparations would be veſted, the views they entertained in calling on the houſe to make the preparations, and the degree of confidence to whith, by their paſt conduct, they were entitled. He wiſhed ſincerely that the addreſs on a former evening had paſſed without any obſervation. The diſcuſſion which had taken place had put the houſe in poſſeſſion of no new information, and at its cloſe members ſeperated as completely ignorant of the circumſtances on which the addreſs was founded, as before the motion was brought forward. While he called for explanation, as he had hitherto given them his ſupport, and had repoſed confidence in their conduct. He had therefore at this moment a peculiar right to know whether circumſtances exiſted to juſtify the continuance of this confidence. He had a right to be informed whether it was to the fault or the misfortune of miniſters that the preſent ſituation of the country was to be attributed. When the preliminaries of peace were firſt ſigned, and before the terms on which it had been concluded were known he had been thankful for the termination of a diſaſtrous war. With this ſentiment he felt obliged to miniſters for the peace which they had concluded, viewing it merely as the deliverance from a war without object or end. When the terms of the peace were known, they had been ſtrenuouſly objected to by gentlemen, of whoſe talents it was impoſſible to ſpeak without the greateſt reſpect. He did not mean to ſay that the objections ſeparately conſidered, did not poſſeſs great weight; but viewing the conditions of the peace, and connecting them with the conſideration of the continuance of war, the ſacrifice, which had been made did not appear to him greater than the object deſerved.

With ſuch views, therefore, he was ſtill willing to give miniſters credit for the concluſion of peace. That the executive power had the full right of determining in the firſt inſtance, on peace and war, was a doctrine which he by no means wiſhed to controvert. This, however, did not by any means interfere with the right of the houſe to enquire how far the ſervants of the crown had exerciſed their power in a treacherous manner, or preclude them from their removal, if they ſhould be judged incapable of managing the affairs of the nation under perilous circumſtances, connected with the maintenance of peace, or the renewal or war. On theſe principles, he therefore ventured to aſk whether, when peace was concluded on terms involving conſiderable ſacrifices, when theſe ſacrifices great as they were conſidered, as the price of an object of anxious deſire, and there was now reaſon to apprehend a renewal of hoſtilities, the houſe had not a fair right to be informed what, after all theſe ſacrifices, was the return which was to be expected; what, for all theſe ſacrifices, was the return which had been obtained? It was not peace, but the proſpect of war, after every conceſſion had been made as the price of tranquility and repoſe. Were the houſe now to be told that they ſhould obtain no explanation? Was the country to be brought into the perilous ſituation in which it was now placed, and was no account to be given of the cauſes by which the ſituation had been produced? Till the houſe and the country were informed what the circumſtances were which had led to this ſituation, he could not, conſiſtently with his duty as a repreſentative of the people, juſtify the preſent motion. As far as the defence of the country was concerned, there was no need of a recommendation from the throne to induce the houſe to do what loyalty, unanimity, and harmony would have ſuggeſted. This was an object which, in the view of a threat of invaſion from any quarter, the houſe would ever have in view, but they would more particularly conſider it, if that threat came from France.

At a moment when that which was deareſt was at ſtake, there was no room for difference of opinion, becauſe every man in defending the country only conſulted the means of his own defence. But had not the houſe and the country a right to have it made out that the conduct hitherto purſued by his majeſty's miniſters was not unwiſe and impolitic; that improper conceſſions had not been made, that the country was not unneceſſarily again to be plunged in war? Till this explanation was given, he could not, conſiſtently with the public duty, continue the ſame confidence which he had formerly repoſed. He did therefore hope that ſome explanation would be given by miniſters how far they meant to go with the preparations, the neceſſity of which they had ſtated. By agreeing to this vote without explanation would in fact ſay that the ſame miniſters who had by the greateſt ſacrifices concluded peace, were to be allowed to bring the country into a war, without affording the ſmalleſt information as to the ground of the renewal of hoſtilities. He threw out theſe ſuggeſtions, not ſo much with the view of entering into any detailed diſcuſſion, as of engaging gentlemen of greater abilities to take up the ſubject. Miniſters owed it to their own characters, to the houſe, and country, to ſhew thatwe were not bro't into our preſent perilous ſituation by any fault on their part. Perhaps to their conduct the extraordinary preparations now called for were owing, and it was ſurely not fit that thoſe who had brought the country into a ſituation where war was the only alternative, ſhould pledge the houſe to the ſupport of that war, without affording any information reſpecting the circumſtances on which it was to be founded. This, be contended, was the clear law of parliament, the preſent was not a moment raſhly to plunge the country into a war. It had already been ſeen what effect his majeſty's meſſage had produced on public credit, and how much the proſpect of a war, no one object of which was explained, would diſhearten the people.

At a time like the preſent, when every exertion might be neceſſary for the ſupport of our independence, it was of high importance that the people ſhould repoſe the moſt ample confidence in his majeſty's confidential ſervants. The leaſt diſtruſt of their capacity could tend only to diſhearten the people, and to fill them with aſtoniſhment and terror. At a moment like this, when we might be called upon to ſtruggle even for our exiſtence as a nation, it was a lamentable conſideration that the ability of the country was excluded from the government. At the moſt perilous criſis in which the country was ever placed, we were deprived of the opinion, the advice the talents of all thoſe great men, whoſe cordial co operation was ſo eſſential to the ſalvation of the country. This language might give offence to many members, but this was not a moment for an independent repreſentative of the people to conceal his ſentiments. It was neceſſary to ſpeak out under the exiſting circumſtances. If the ſhip ſunk, then would all go down with the unſkilful pilot. He wiſhed to preſs theſe conſiderations on the attention of the houſe. They were conſiderations which he had not offered to the attention of the houſe without due reflection. He had viewed the ſubject with the greateſt poſſible ſerioufneſs, and he had ſuggeſted what his anxiety for the ſafety and welfare of the country ſuggeſted.

Extract of a letter from a gentleman in London, to his friend in this city, dated March 17.

"I reached London on the evening of the 8th inſtant, from France. At the very moment of ſitting down at my friend's houſe a manuſcript copy of the king's war meſſage was received at his office. Never was my aſtoniſhment greater. It was but three days ſince I had left France in a perfect ſtate of peace and tranquility, and as far as I could diſcern, without any idea exiſting in the minds of the French people, as to a proſpect of a rupture with this country. Sure I am that THEY do not wiſh for ſuch an event. Next morning I was at all the coffee houſes in the neighbourhood of 'change. The king's meſſage engroſſed all the converſation, and deep conſternation was pictured on the faces of moſt of the ſtock jobbers. It is impoſſible to ſtate what is the public opinion relative to the preſent proſpect of war. One portion of the people are guided in their judgments merely by intereſted motives: others are open mouthed for war at all hazards; while others again are ſtrongly oppoſed to it, under any circumſtances, and inſiſt that a renewal of hoſtilities will totally ruin the country. For my own part, I cannot think that the government of this country is earneſtly intent on war. In her preſent ſituation, the idea appears to me to be too prepoſterous for a moment's reflection. The army agents have commenced purchaſes of many articles—a warm preſs has exiſted ever ſince the meſſage, and new warrants are iſſuing every day, and yet, as I obſerved before, I cannot bring my mind to the belief that Great Britain is in earneſt for war. It is true the exports have diminiſhed ſince the peace, and a great diſſatisfaction prevails becauſe the French refuſe to enter into a commercial treaty; but can this be a ſufficient motive for war?

A ſimilar diſtemper to that which rages in Paris, prevails here; but it is not ſo mortal."

NORFOLK, May 5.

By the brig Favorite, captain Fryer, from Bordeaux, letters are received which announce the arrival of Mr. Monroe, at Havre.

It is reported, that the ſhip Belvidere, 30 days from London, went up the Bay on Tueſday; accounts are ſaid to be bro't by this veſſel as late as the firſt of April. Mr. Banks, a Hampton Pilot, has been on board, and was told by the captain, that he was in poſſeſſion of a copy of the Declaration of War between England and France. We do not vouch for the authenticity of the above information—but from the accounts publiſhed in this day's Herald, it will be ſeen that a Declaration of War is not at all improbable.

Arrived the brig Favorite, capt. Fryer, 35 days from Bordeaux. On the 15th of April, in lat. 35, 15, N. long. 39, 46, W. fell in with and ſpoke the ſch'r Cyrus, capt. Jacob Noire, from Mogadore, bound to Newburyport. Captain N. informed that on the 24th of June, 1802, the ſchooner Betſey, capt. S. Shore was loſt in a bay on the Barbary coaſt, oppoſite the Iſland of Lanzarotte, and that the Captain, Mate, and all but three of the crew were drowned in the ſurf, attempting to get on ſhore. The above information captain Noire had from John Brawday, one of the men that was ſaved, who came into Mogadore a few days before he ſailed, and left the other two in ſlavery among the Moors.

Arrived The Britiſh brig Peggy, capt. Boag, from Glaſgow.

The ſchr. Gurneran and Peggy capt. Landers, from Havanna.

The ſhip Monticello, capt. Wilſon, from City Point, bound to London, put back yeſterday, 10 days out, having ſprung a leak.

The ſchooner Maria, Lewis from St. Croix,

The ſhip Julia, Dabnee, from Cape Francois.

The Britiſh ſhip Scipio, Houſton from Liverpool.

The ſhip Octavia, capt Keown from Liverpool, has arrived in the Roads, bound to City Point.

TUESDAY, MAY 10.

☞ Notice.—THE ſubſcribers to the Volunteer Military Aſſociation are requeſted to meet at Mr. MOTT's Tavern, at eight o'clock, THIS EVENING, to receive the report of the committee appointed on their behalf to correſpond with Gen. MASON, relative to the organization of the Company.

THE COMMITTEE.

Tueſday, May 10

DIED, on Monday the 9th inſt. at Clermont, after a ſhort, though painful illneſs, Mrs. DAVIS, aged 60 years, conſort of the Rev. Thomas Davis. During her life ſhe manifeſted the ſtrongeſt regard for chriſtianity—and upon her death bed diſcovered that compoſure which characterizes the true Chriſtian when about to leave this for that "bourne from whence no traveller returns." A friend pays this tribute to her memory.

DIED, on Sunday morning laſt, Mr. MASON DICKEY, Printer.

Died at Detroit, on the 11th ult. JOHN F. HAMTRAMCK, Eſq. colonel in the 1ſt regiment, in the army of the United States. He was a native of Canada, joined the American army in 1775, and continued in that ſervice nearly 27 years; as a diſciplinarian he was examplary; as a gentleman and an officer highly reſpectable. Having merited the approbation of general Waſhington, he received from him the moſt honorable teſtimonials.

Tench Coxe, vs. Edward Pennington.

This was an amicable action, on a feigned iſſue, to try the queſtion, whether a duty was payable on ſugar, refined within the United States before the 30th of June 1802, but not removed from the manufactory till after that day?

The argument was conducted, for the United States, by Mr. Dallas, on the general ground, that the repeal of the internal taxes, did not affect any duty, which had accrued and was outſtanding, on the 30th of June, 1802, that the duty on ſugar accrued as ſoon as it was refined; but that it muſt remain outſtanding, until it was removed from the manufactory, in complying with the pre-exiſting arrangements, for accommodating the refiners, in the time and terms of payment. The duty under ſuch circumſtances, was to be conſidered as debitum in praeſenti, ſolvendum in futuro.

The argument for the refiners proceeded upon the general ground, that the law contemplated the concurrence of two contingencies, before the duty could be ſaid to accrue: viz. the act of refining, and, alſo, the act of removal; and that unleſs the duty had ſo accrued, it could not be deſcribed as outſtanding, ſo as to be embraced by the terms of the proviſo in the repealing act.

Waſhington, Juſtice, delivered the opinion of the court at large, in which he adopted the conſtruction of the diſtrict attorney; and judgment was, accordingly rendered for the plaintiff.

Aurora.

By capt. Rutherford, of the Minerva, from Point Petre, arrived at New York, we learn that the exportation of coffee in American bottoms is prohibited. There was a great difference of opinion prevalent at the iſland of Guadaloupe—ſome for and others againſt the meaſures of Bonaparte.

Extract of a letter from New Orleans, dated March 19, 1803.

"A plot of an alarming nature has been diſcovered within a few days paſt, which threatened in its execution, death and deſtruction to the inhabitants of this place. Since the commencement of the troubles in St. Domingo government had prohibited the introduction of negroes of all claſſes, but eſpecially French. Notwithſtanding the moſt rigid execution of this law, a number of blacks have been introduced, and even ſome of thoſe who had been witneſſes to the maſſacrees of St. Domingo, who, influenced with vengeance, have attempted to inſpire their brethren here with the idea of liberty, and quality, which has been ſpreading among them for ſome years, without the obſervance of the government.

"The affair had nearly arrived to its criſis, when it was to have exploded, had it not been communicated to a negro man who was to have enjoyed conſiderable rank in the tranſaction, but who was too honeſt to give it his countenance, and accordingly made a diſcloſure to government, who had the principal leaders apprehended, and have taken ſuch other meaſures as will effectually prevent any further danger. Among the leaders of this infernal band, I am ſorry to ſay, there is one American, who tho' before a deſpicable wretch, will prove a ſtigma to our countrymen.

"There are now in our port upwards of 100 veſſels, and between 20 and 30 in the river, the greateſt part of which are Americans.

Freight to Europe, Cotton 3½ to 4 cents.

To the United States, 2½ cents.

Eight or ten French veſſels have alſo arrived, and been admitted to entry.

Cotton, Spaniſh 15½ cents.
American 17
Flour, freſh 5½ to 7 dols per bl.
Logwood, 30 to 32."

From our Correſpondent at the Cape, we received the following information:

"At preſent all is quiet, and we have no alarm ſince the attack upon Fort Dauphin. That place was lately ſtormed by the brigands during the night, in conſequence of ſome mulattoes, treacherouſly, giving the counterſign to our enemies. Led on alone by plunder, the brigands ſuffered the inhabitants to be acquainted of their danger. Reinforcements happily were called in, and the plunderers repulſed with conſiderable loſs. Few of the inhabitants were killed.

"Our fears about another attack are conſiderably diminiſhed, as we hear General Rochambeau intends ſhortly to commence his march towards this place, from Port Republican. A meeting took place a few days ſince between the brigand officers and the officers of the town, by means of a flag of truce—they met in the outer part of the town, and dined together—ſtrange change! to obſerve men a few months paſt only met in the furious and hoſtile array of battle, now join to partake of the pleaſure of the ſocial feaſt.

"The reſult of this conference is not yet known publicly; but it is generally believed, and from good authority, that the negroes have agreed to return to their former plantations, on condition that they ſhall be conſidered as hirelings, not as ſlaves."

(Phil. pap.)

Captain Ripely, of the ſchooner Riſing Sun from Trinidad, brings out a proclamation of the Governor of that place, dated the 6th of April laſt, declaring, that it ſhall be lawful for veſſels the property of ſubjects of the United States of America, coming directly from the ſaid States with lumber of all kinds, flour, peas, and corn, ſalted and other proviſions, pitch, tar, turpentine, tobacco, cattle, horſes, mules, and live ſtock, being the growth and produce of ſaid United States, to diſpoſe of their cargoes, and receive in barter or exchange any articles the produce of this Iſland (except indigo, cotton, lignumvitæ, and dying woods of all deſcriptions,) to the exact amount of their reſpective cargoes, and no more. To continue in force for ſix months from the 5th of April.
